Finely textured foliage features attractive curls at the end of each stem, making it one of the most unique sedges. I find the clumps of striking, reddish-bronze foliage make nice fillers, groundcovers, and specimen plantings. This evergreen sedge is also a good choice as a foliage accent in perennial borders, rock gardens, or around water gardens. It is grown mainly for its foliage, as the flowers are insignificant. This carex thrives in full sun in rich, moist soil and is hardy in Zones 5-9.
