TRYING NEW PLANTS

It is always fun to try growing new plants each year. I often "trial" them in containers to see how they perform before buying a large quantity for my planting beds. I also like using them as a focal point since new introductions are often more expensive. I mix them with some favorites that have been around for a while and cost less. This helps me stretch my plant budget while filling my landscape with beautiful flowers and gardens with tasty vegetables.

PET AND PEOPLE TOXICITY

- Consult your veterinarian and aspca.org for information on some of the plants that are toxic and non toxic to pets
- Consult plants.ces.ncsu.edu for information on toxicity of individual plants for people and pets

ANNUALS

You will notice hardiness zones for some of these plants. These are perennials, returning each year in the garden, in areas where they are hardy. The rest of us have to treat them as annuals and replant each year or overwinter them indoors.
